"All attempts to get rid of baptism in this passage have sprung from doctrinal prejudices by which views of expositors have been warped" – Alford

"Of all the ancient writers there is not one to be named who ever expounded the text otherwise than implying water baptism" – Hooker

"A popular interpretation has water representing human birth—the womb; contrasted to the Spirit. This overlooks that the whole expression 'water and spirit' defines the manner in which one is born from above. Suggestions like these do not do justice to the text and have not commended themselves to scholarly opinion" – G.R. Beasley-Murray
